Everyday Living...Everyday Style with Saloom

The dining table is the heart of your home. It is where meals are shared with family, where kids play together and do homework, where your family discussions are held and where you entertain friends and family. Something so central to your home and lifestyle should be well designed, and built to last.

Saloom New England utilizes a unique combination of old fashioned American ingenuity, combined with a drive for design and innovation.

They construct solid wood dining table tops that are customizable. Choose between a classic silky smooth top, wood planked trestle top to achieve an antique farm table feel and hand hewn tops that capture the rich textures discovered back when boards were hand-planed to make table tops.

They have also utilized the long lost art of hand sculpted distressing methods with perfection. There are three levels of distressing that can be used to achieve the look and feel that you are striving towards. For a more subtle aged feel, the basic distressing method of slightly worn edges might be just the ticket. If you prefer the look of a time worn antique, the vintage distressing technique could be perfect for your taste. The heritage distressing might catch your eye with worn edges and deeply chiseled splits for a warm, rustic appearance.

Capture the very essence of your family with Saloom New England at Lea Matthews Furniture and Interiors. Memorable moments with loved ones start at home, so make the heart of your home the place to be!

Rest Easy With The Perfect Mattress

Your mattress is one of the most important pieces of furniture in your home. In fact, you'll spend a third of your life on it. That is more than the time you spend watching television or sitting at a computer. No other piece of furniture contributes so profoundly to your health and well being. Buying a mattress is a decision that you should carefully consider. Since most people replace their mattress every seven to ten years, you'll have to live with your decision for a long time. For most buyers, comfort is the single most important factor. Support and durability rank close behind. When people consider buying a mattress, all too often they let price be their first, and only, guide. It becomes clear that mattress buying deserves the same amount of careful research as your choice of what vehicle to drive or where to go on vacation.

Allow our experienced design staff at Lea Matthews Furniture and Interiors show you our new line of Bowles mattresses and test them out for yourself! Bowles Mattress Company was established in Jeffersonville, Indiana in 1975 with the commitment to manufacture and distribute the highest quality mattresses and sleep solution products. Be ahead of the others and use this guide to help you plan for your new mattress:

Budget: People often over extend themselves with purchases that they may not be able to afford. A high price tag for a mattress does not guarantee the absolute best set. However, do not go cheap either. Set a budget and let that be your guide. Bowles manufactures over forty different types of mattresses, providing customers with an enormous selection to accommodate any size, comfort, or pricing need.

Size: The size of your mattress will be somewhat limited to the actual size of the room it is going in. Consider whether you are sleeping alone or with a partner. In that case a queen size or king size might be a better option. There are also extra long beds for all of you tall people!

Composition of Materials: Different mattresses provide various combinations of material that give the desired firmness level. Some give the sensation of firm or stiff support, while others feel like a marshmallow and let you sink directly into them. Typical construction of a mattress is a box spring foundation with an innerspring mattress on top. Bowles utilizes experienced craftsmen construct mattresses, from the economical to the most luxurious, using only the most select components in all sleep systems and exclusive wood for box spring construction.

Thickness: Thickness is also known as the "depth" of a mattress. Manufacturers add foam to increase the comfort and softness of the mattress. These surfaces are called a pillow-top, which can be stuffed with foam or even feathers to give an additional layer of comfort. This is important as the dimensions for your sheets might be affected because of the extra inches added to the mattress's overall depth. In other words a deeper bed may require a larger bedspread than the claimed size. Make sure you measure the mattress from top to bottom and get the correct thickness.

Foundation: You cannot build a solid house without a good foundation. The same applies to a mattress. Your bed frame should provide a firm, strong support for the mattress and counterparts. A solid steel frame is usually recommended. This frame should have support on the four major corners and middle frame so it will not sag. Some frames are specifically built to fit a specific box spring size; others are adjustable and fit different bed sizes.

Level of Firmness: Mattress firmness is personal preference. Some people like the hard support of sleeping on the floor, while others may find comfort in a soft pillow surrounding. Any type is suitable as long as it supports your back and body evenly while you rest. They currently have adjustable beds, which allow you to inflate the air coils to a certain level of firmness depending on how you sleep. You could also purchase two smaller mattresses and place them side by side, one being firm and the other being soft. Bowles offers a vast assortment of Specialty Bedding ranging from Visco Elastic Memory Foam, Latex, Digital Air Systems, Adjustable Beds, Kids products, and Custom Size Beds.

(1.) Boxspring: A good foundation needs to be stable and durable. The foundation provides a lot of the firmness to the mattress.

(2.) Innerspring Unit: It is not the number of coils that a mattress has that is important - it's the construction of the coils. Most importantly, be sure that the coils have been tempered.

(3.) Edge Support: Edge support is an important feature in a mattress, as it allows you to use the entire sleeping surface without rolling off.

(4.) Upholstery: The upholstery layers create the plusher or firmer feels of mattresses and foams ensure durability and comfort for years.
